

Creating your animation is a significant step in blending your technical skills with your personal vision and understanding of the world. It's a process that goes beyond just improving your abilities; it's about expressing your unique identity and setting a foundation for your career.

As you develop your director's statement and decide on the format for your project, think about how these choices reflect your personal perspective and goals. Let your project be a demonstration of your commitment and a stepping stone towards your professional aspirations.

Consider these questions as you plan your project:

How does your project reflect your passion for animation and how does it establish a base for your career goals? Which specific skills and animation techniques are you excited to explore and develop in your project, and how will these contribute to your professional growth?

What steps will you take to advance towards your long-term career goals, and how do you envision your progress in the animation industry over the next ten years?
